The Index.

Another College year is lying at the Reaper's feet, and in the second volume of The Index we offer our friends a record of work accomplished and progress attained. A most fair and promising dawn of the opening year authorizes confident hopes of future success.

Our circle has at last been completed with a class of thirty-two members, seemingly of good material, allowing us to enroll within these pages the four customary classes, each distinguished by special peculiarities, from the Senior,

> "With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
> Full of wise saws and modern instances,"

to the guileless, studious Freshman,

> "With shining morning face."

Our oft lamented vacancy in the Faculty has been filled, and we no longer need to look abroad for spiritual instruction, but home-like, can worship under a minister belonging to us alone. Our new Professor has also imparted fresh enthusiasm to other studies, and won at the outset the respect and confidence of the students.

Perfect harmony exists between ruler and ruled, and a healthy moral sentiment among the students themselves, upholding law and order, renders light and easy the task of governing. "Muscular Christianity" has also its votaries here as elsewhere. Without any outside aid we have raised a liberal sum as a basis for a boating organization, and a crew of four weeks' training has already nobly and victoriously represented our College in the popular "Cedar Shell."

It is our sad lot to record our first losses by death. First, a student, in the full vigor and hope of young manhood, was suddenly taken from us. And now a teacher, useful and beloved, has passed on before, leaving a bright example of life's work well done, more enduring than the most costly monument.

Thus, through light and shade, through calm and storm, we are slowly but surely gaining ground, choosing rather to commence at the beginning than at the eleventh hour of our existence. Meeting discouragements necessarily accompanying a new enterprise, we still feel we are laying the foundations, broad and firm, of an institution whose light radiating far and near, shall disarm old-time prejudice and ignorance, and reflect honor upon founders and State.

"By their fruits ye shall know them," and we confidently await the results, when annually she sends out her men, armed with a live education to battle with a live age.

Communications.

Again, and for the last time, '71 presents her communication to The Index. Before another volume is issued we shall have resigned our position as Seniors, and taken up that of Alumni. And yet how little we realize that four of the best years of our lives have passed since the College was brought into existence through us.

The position of the first class in any college is one of a very peculiar nature. Theories are to be put in practice; courses of study developed, and a general outline given to the college; while it is reserved for future classes to fill out the details. Realizing these facts, we entered as the first class. Accepting them, we have endeavored throughout our course to fulfill the duties devolving upon us. In many particulars we may have failed, but it has not been from lack of interest. Our best wishes always have been and always will be with the College. In our studies during the past year we have wandered through the pages of History, Astronomy, Rhetoric, Literature, Mental Science, Geology, &c. In each of these departments we have made some progress, and have learned to love those whose patient efforts guided us to hidden treasures therein. We welcomed with joy the advent of our new Professor in Science, and chaplain whom we could call our own. We congratulate ourselves on the fact that our numbers remain the same, while the golden cord of friendship has been drawn tighter about us, strengthened by many fond associations, the memory of which will ever be a bright feature in our recollections of the past.

It is with feelings of sadness, mingled with joy, that we look forward to our graduation from College. We are anxious to begin our life-work, and yet, shall find it hard to break up friendships which we may have formed, both in college and in the community in which our lot has been cast. On the good people of Amherst we bestow our best wishes, and flatter ourselves that we shall receive the same from them. Our fondest expectations will always be inseparable from the under classes, particularly '72, whose course, parallel with ours for three years, has given us better opportunities for acquaintance than with the other classes. We feel that the honor of the College will not suffer with them. Our four years' course has thus far been of pleasure and profit to us, and if the memory of college life shall be as happy as our participation therein, our lot will be pleasant indeed.

We have passed the meridian; and as Juniors, commence the last, but pleasantest half of college life. Our time thus far has been profitably spent, and if the remaining years show as good a record as the former, we shall have little to regret. We are still on the best of terms with the Faculty; and never "cut" or "bolt" recitations, preferring rather to use our "cheek" than our heels.

This term closes our study of German, and practice in the Laboratory. The interesting lectures on Organic Chemistry, which we are now receiving, are such as no one but Prof. Goessmann could give us, and we hope to have them continued next term. We were glad to attend the lectures on Entomology, by Dr. Packard, but regret that much of interest was lost to us. Under the instruction of Capt. Alvord, we have learned to handle the "big guns."

Much of the beauty of the grounds in front of the College is due to our untiring energy, which seems to be appreciated by nearly all but the Freshmen, who can't heed the frequent call to "keep off the grass," but prefer to go "'cross-lots," because they like to be on the green, and it is so awkward to go 'round.

Our "class-work" at present is of the highest character found on the farm. The landscape view to the east of the College has been greatly diversified by the numerous dwarf oak and chestnut trees which we have lately set out there. May the College live to see the fruit of our labor.

We exceedingly mourn the death of Professor Miller, one of the best of professors, a man of true Christian character, who has labored earnestly here for the spiritual and temporal welfare of the students. Beginning his labors at the time we entered, he had taken a special interest in us, and we were his favorite class. He will be greatly missed, and not soon will another be found equally qualified for the position left vacant.

We begin to realize that the time is drawing near when '71 must leave us. We shall miss them, less as exemplars than as companions, for we have been very intimate from the first. We are glad they did not leave us once, but decided to complete the course. We have not much to do with '73 and '74, only to quell riots between them. As for ourselves, we are more united than ever, and can say, for our credit, that we have no "cliques," which so much disturb the peace of a class. May our numbers remain good, and our motives pure. D.

Long live '73. Pride of the M. A. C., and the terror of all unwary Freshmen.

We have passed safely through the dread ordeal, (which, however, did not amount to much, for '72 "steered clear," and "let us alone" severely while we were Freshmen,) and now we stand before admiring but envious multitudes, as Sophomores.

O, what dignity and majestic grandeur accompany those who bear this glorious title! Well do we deserve it, though, for we are as smart and jolly a set of youths as ever bore this honored name. Where, O where, in all the universe, can our equal be found? Echo alone can answer "Where?" Though small in number, yet we are great in intellect and muscle. In studies our standing is excellent, and in all out-door sports, ditto. We are well represented in the famous "Wilder nine," and two of the strongest oars in the boat crew are pulled by our men.

With our Professors we are on the best of terms. We strive to perform the duties they require of us faithfully, and by so doing give them no cause for complaint.

With the other classes we get along very well. Peace has been declared between '72 and '73, and now we smoke the calumet together with sweet serenity and in perfect harmony. With '74 we have had so little to do that they are beginning to rejoice at the thought of escaping us so easily. But, pause for a moment, O ye jubilant Freshmen, and hearken unto us while we give you a bit of advice, viz: "Never crow until you are out of the woods." You know not at what hour the Sophs may come. Be content, therefore, to follow meekly in the footsteps of your predecessors, thanking fortune for the peaceful and child-like state which you now enjoy. As time rolls on we become more united, and press forward with one accord toward the goal which our worthy Seniors have now so nearly reached, trusting that ere our college life is o'er, friendships will have been formed which death alone can sever.

Freshmen! This name may sound very insignificant to some, and especially to other classes, but to us it appears as a title to some future history, wherein the names of the present Freshmen will stand among the highest on the records of fame.

We made our entrance here with some few indications of home-sickness at first, but as we gradually became acquainted with each other, our thoughts of home were diminished, and now if a student is heard to speak of home, it is with reference to his pecuniary circumstances. At present we feel somewhat honored with Capt. Alvord's compliments on our success in the military department, but as he has said nothing as yet to cheer us in our mathematical course, we will leave that.

Our introduction to the other class ("Sophs" via "rush,") was rather late in the day, and as "Prex" Clark says, was a complete failure ; (on the part of the Sophs.)

Our "mock trial," being very well attended, passed off quietly with the exception of a few disturbances from the other classes, and "flunks" on the part of the court. Here's to the Professors, of whom we could say much had we time and room, but will say that thus far we like them well, but sometimes think "distance would lend enchantment to the view," especially about recitation hour.

Under the management of Prof. Stockbridge, we flatter ourselves we have been of some service to the institution in the way of digging ditches and potatoes, pulling corn, and in many other employments essential to the future welfare of the "Freshies."

We expect to have (Providence permitting,) a boat crew equal to the "Oxfords," and under the instruction of Capt. Johns we will without a doubt stand among the "highest of the high." We have representatives in both the "Washington Irving" and "Pi Delta Kappa" Societies, and the natural consequence is, that they are splendid societies. We have also, or rather had, a nine of Base Ball, very well represented at the famous game at Belchertown, and of course came off victorious, hoping always to be as lucky.

We think we can say with a clear conscience that we hope to aspire to that standing in life where as representatives of the Agricultural College, and one of the pioneer classes, we will be an honor to this institution. A.
